

President Trump's Administration Could Lift Mining Restrictions on One of the Biggest Undeveloped Gold Mines in the World.

If he does this companies shares could soar 300% to 800% as gold and copper rise in price over the next 4 years!

*By James DiGeorgia, Editor
Gold and Energy Advisor*

Back in 2014 The Environmental Protection Agency announced a set of restrictions that has prevented the development of a controversial copper and gold mine in Alaska which many environmentalists say would be disastrous for the state's largest salmon fishery.

The Pebble Mine, located in south-west Alaska near Bristol Bay, could be one of the largest opencast mines in the world — more than a mile deep, the depth of the Grand Canyon. It may be one of the largest undeveloped gold mines in the world.

Now that Donald J. Trump is President the owner of the mine Northern Dynasty Minerals Ltd. (NYSE:NAK) may well see the EPA stand aside and allow the development of its property. NAK shares have vaulted since November 7th on speculation that President Trump's EPA is going to lift the mining restrictions placed on their property.

As you can see by the ErlangerChartRoom.com chart below NAK has been on a tear...

EPA blocks huge Alaska mine project with environmental restrictions

- Pebble mine decision protects state's largest salmon fishery
- Copper and gold mine stood to affect Manhattan-sized area

📌 In this 2007 photo, workers with the Pebble Mine project test drill in the Bristol Bay region of Alaska. The mine is now unlikely to proceed. Photograph: Al Grillo/AP

I'm not a fan of President Trump but I'm NOT allergic to making money. The fact is Northern Dynasty Minerals Ltd. (NYSE:NAK) traded as high as $21 a share back in January 2011 when gold soared and copper was still being bought hand over fist by the Chinese. With gold slightly over $1200 and copper still in doldrums if the EPA lifts its restrictions on the Pebble Mine NAK could easily jump to $10 a share. It's trading for less than $3 a share.

The Pebble mine project could be enormous. In order to develop, it could take up an area the size of the Island of Manhattan. Back in 2014, under the Obama Administration the EPA, took the position the development of this mine was unacceptable risk to the environment. Powerful groups including the Bristol Bay Salmon industry and from Alaska's native community have argued that the area is integral to their way of life and Alaska's economy.

Given President Trump's appointment of Scott Pruitt who sued the EPA 13 times during his tenure as Oklahoma's attorney general and has both close ties to oil and gas industry and will likely dramatically loosen toxic chemical regulations. During his Senate hearing called for an expanded role for states in environmental regulation, what he termed cooperative federalism, and suggested that wide ranging regulatory actions of the EPA under President Obama often amounted to regulatory overreach. Pruitt framed his stance on regulations as a question of following the rule of law and supporting economic growth.

EPA Nominee Scott Pruitt Acknowledges Global Warming But Wants to Restrain the Agency

TIME Justin Worland
Time January 18, 2017

Environmental groups strongly oppose his nomination

Pruitt said during the recent Senate confirmation hearing

“As Attorney General of Oklahoma, I saw examples where the Agency became dissatisfied with the tools Congress has given it to address certain issues, and bootstrapped its own powers and tools through rulemaking.”

As an investor looking to rack up some gigantic returns as a result of the election of President Trump and changes in environmental policies by the EPA it's important to know that Northern Dynasty Minerals Ltd. may possibly be able to develop Bristol Bay.

Alaska Senator Lisa Murkowski is up for re-election and has already indicated she would support a shift in the EPA's policies saying when the current EPA restrictions were put in place ...

“The EPA is setting a precedent that strips Alaska and all Alaskans of the ability to make decisions on how to develop a healthy economy on their lands. This [decision] is a blueprint that will be used across the country to stop economic development.”

RECOMMENDATION: Don't chase Northern Dynasty Minerals Ltd. (NYSE:NAK) shares and pay too much.

NAK closed on Friday at $2.63.

Try to snag a 1000 shares I will include in the Gold and Energy $50,000 hypothetical portfolio at its closing price on Monday January 23, 2017.

I own no shares and have not been paid to advocate for this recommendation.

* Future stock price projections, predictions are hypothetical, and entirely based on subjective analysis.

 Track record examples are based entirely on hypothetical paper trades.

©2017 Gold and Energy Advisor, FinestKnown, LLC All rights reserved.

Please read Gold and Energy Advisor's full risk disclosure by clicking the link below.